Farm crop trials

Looking to develop or refresh your skills in farm crop trials?

You are invited to participate in a hands-on course for cotton industry personnel who want to host a research trial or set up their own in-crop farm trial.

Learn the latest in research design and data collection from Dr Sophie Parks, a plant systems research horticulturist, and other CSIRO researchers.

- Industry standards for crop trials
- What makes a good trial – experimental design
- Common problems with trials and how to overcome them
- Planning a crop trial
- Monitoring the crop trial
- Good data versus bad data

Developed and delivered by Tocal College in partnership with CSIRO.

Who should attend the course?

This course is for cotton farmers, consultants, supervisors, and contractors who are interested in farm crop trials.

What does the course consist of?

1. Online component prior to workshop:
 - Reading and instructional videos
 - Short quizzes and assessment
2. Two-day interactive face to face workshop and practical sessions.

Accredited training

This course is aligned and delivered against vocational education and training requirements. Successful completion of assessment tasks will result in achieving a Statement of Attainment and can contribute to a nationally-recognised qualification. All activities and assessment will be completed in supported environment.

Units of competency

- AHCWRK514 - Manage trial and research material
- AHCWRK207 - Collect and record production data

This course has been developed by Tocal College in collaboration with CSIRO and Cotton RDC specifically for the cotton industry and is funded by the NSW Government's AgSkilled™ program.
